to see the rapide themselves, but now they ome to see where Capt. Webb tried to saw in through and lost his life, and I believe his incurance. A small boy metual and for a compensation offered to show us just where the captain was last seen. I told him that I didn't think I had compensationally the same of the compensation o lot him that I didn't think I had compensations enough with me to last me back to the hotel, and furthermore I didn't care a dam—I am quite sure I used the word dam—where Captain Webb was hat seen, for anybody who was idde enough to try to swim those rapids ought never to have been seen last at all. I done knew a many who left a slik umbrella in the lothy of a theatre, and who went back the next day to see if he could find it, and that incident has always remained in my mind, as the next consummate place of foolishness that a man ever did, or ever could do, but Webb has laid all over him, and covered him completely.

Webb has laid all over him, and covered him completely.

After the water had plunged over the falls it sort of stune it and it lays around in a kind of a dazed way, and then commences to slowly run down the river, it starts bort of moderate, but in a little sine it gets over its numbness and comes to its self, and when it reaches the rapkie it has recogned the full use of its limbs, aid the way it tears down between the rocky banks of the river and lespa, up, and turns somersaults and froths and foams at the mouth as if it twere chewing No. 9 brown mouth as if it were obewing No. 9 brown
